This panel explores the complicated story of infant feeding and how history, race, income, and other factors influence the decision on how to feed a baby. Led by Kimberly Durdin (International Board of Lactation Consultant Examiners, doula, senior student midwife; Kindred Space LA), Pauline Sakamoto (Mothers' Milk Bank San Jose), and others. This panel is part of a series of events that explore the ways we talk about and engage in the often-private act of feeding infants and toddlers. This project will build community and conversation around lactation, first foods, labor, caretaking, and family-making. Capacity is limited; RSVP preferred, space given on a first-come, first-served basis.
