(EAST HOLLYWOOD) A free digital archive with more than 500 items related to the Hollyhock House was unveiled yesterday.

The "Hollyhock House Digital Archive" includes original drawings, blueprints and other items, which date from 1918 through the early 21st century, according to the Los Angeles Dept. of Cultural Affairs.

The house is a Frank Lloyd Wright-designed building and a UNESCO World Heritage site. The archive is available here.

“We are creating a unique, user-friendly, world-class experience at Hollyhock House, both on-site and virtually,” said Los Angeles City Councilmember Mitch O’Farrell. “Since the facility was selected as part of a UNESCO World Heritage designation, we are furthering our work to create an architectural centerpiece for the city of Los Angeles.”

The city’s cultural affairs department created the archive with support from the California Arts Council.

Visitors can utilize the online site to explore the records related to the building, renovations, restorations and additions to the home.

“The Department of Cultural Affairs is thrilled for the opportunity to make this archive material available to those interested in Aline Barnsdall’s vision and Frank Lloyd Wright’s work,” said Danielle Brazell, the department’s general manager. “Viewing the collection gives anyone interested in the history of the property a deeper understanding.”

Hollyhock House was completed in 1921 and was the home of Aline Barnsdall, a philanthropist and art collector and it is recognized as the first Los Angeles building designed by Wright.

The house was reopened in 2015 after a four-year, $4.4 million renovation. It is now the centerpiece of Barnsdall Park.
